PRESIDENT BUSY DURING THE DAY ON HIS MESSAGE

By BILL PRICE.

President Wilson's custom of go-ing into seclusion and denying him-self to all callers while preparing annual and other addresses to Con-

annual and other addresses to Congress or important State papers generally is interesting in comparison with the habits of other Presidents.
All Presidents have had to deny themselves to visitors for brief perlods while working upon messages to Congress or other papers, but none of them since Lincoln ever went into practical sectuation from the time the messages were darted until finished.

Roosevelt was the best advance worker on Presidential messages ever in the White House. His messages the Worker of nearly all kinds were talking to him: "Just let the Kaiser almost invariably handed to the gress associations and newspapers har in advance, giving them every patched to South American waters in opportunity to prepare for the fullest publication, with the least trouble, the That, to a large extent, accounted for the fact that his official actions received widespread attention at the EDUCATIONAL for the fact that his official actions received widespread attention at the hands of the press. He began work on his annual messages a month in advance, disposing of one subject after another, reserving the most important for the last. He dictated everything to his stenographer. His annual message covered a wide field. President Wilson communicates with Congress oftener than did Roosevelt or Taft, and his addresses are shorter. He prefers to deal with one important question at a time when possible to do so, and to press before Congress one thing at a time, rather than half a dozen froms in the fire at once. half a dozen frons in the fire at once.

Taft Neglected Press. resident Taft's habits in dictating Terms of le his measures were procrastinatory, as he often admitted. He cared little for the advantages of publicity, his secretaries found him a hard customer to deal with when they suggested advance preparation. Occasionally he had these documents ready in advance, and at other times they were not ready until the last minute.

Six Sons In Army, Seventh Is Killed In Automobile Wreck

CHICAGO, Nov. 29,-With six CHICAGO, Nov. 29.—With six sons in the army and a letter from President Wilson commending them for doing so much for their country, Mr. and Mrs. Richard A. McGuaran, sr., are today grieving over the loss of the seventh son, who was fatally injured yesterday in an automo-bile wreck. "It's God's will, but who would have thought that the boy back home would be the first to go," said Mrs. McGuaran, as she viewed the body of her son to-day.

later was on his way to Africa.

Roosevelt was the par excellence news maker of all Presidents. The Rosswell was the par excellence bractical sectuation from the time the messages were started until finished. President Wilson shut himself upserpar man who could not write a couple of columns about his doings several days ago ind began operating to paper his thoughts on the needs of the nation. For a month or several weeks the President has made stanographic notes of the subjects he thinks Congress should have his advice and recommendation upon next Tuesday. He is now developing these thoughts upon his typewriter. When he has completed the message he will send it to the public printer and unwrap himself from seclusion for a short fifm.

The President again worked on the message to day so that it may be ready for the newspapers at the earliest possible moment. There is silways pressure from press associations and newspapers to get Presidential messages or speeches in advance so that the telegraph wires, already always pressure from press associations and newspapers to get Presidential messages or speeches in advance so that the telegraph wires, already loaded down with war and other news, may not be congested to a danger point. The press associations continually urge secretaries to Fresidents to give them copies of messages at least five days in advance, so that they may be malled to papers as far as the Facific coast, thereby obviating the use of wires.

Occasionally Mr. Wilson has been able to oblige the press associations, but his present message will have to be carried to far points by wire.

Mr. Wilson is habitually a man of seclusion when working on important papers or considering big matters. He has practically coased to use the Executive offices, where Roosevelt mad Taft worked, and retires to his private office in the residence portion of the White House. He gives orders to the chief usher against interruption of any kind unless of great moment, and every subordinate under him obeys these orders.
